

Conversations with Aging Parents

Reframing your conversations for positive results

Are you concerned that your aging parent or loved one is no longer safe living alone in their home? Could they benefit from a more supportive, caring environment as well as socialization with peers? Unfortunately fear and anxiety can hold us back from taking the steps we know would be beneficial for those we love. For many, effectively communicating their concerns to a loved one can be quite challenging.

Please join us for this free program presented by Adele Lund, Director of Community Relations for the Laureate Group. For 30 years Adele has listened to and learned from families in various stages of transition. She has worked with older adults as they consider the next step in life and has guided children of seniors who are trying to navigate the maze of long term care with their loved ones.

Adele will explore:

- How to have a loving conversation about the need for change
- How to achieve a positive outcome by reframing what you want to convey
- How to make this a collaborative process
- When it's time to talk and when it's time to listen
- How to recognize the difference between a person who is being difficult and one who is fearful of change
- How to create an honoring environment and not an adversarial one
